BASE set of four knives in a knife block.
By making the handle and blade from one piece of metal, the knives are given a sculptural look.

During the course of the past year, the design team of Studio Piet Boon has focused on a set of four knives made of the best German steel, and a corresponding knife block in acacia wood, as an addition to the existing BASE tableware collection. In line with that collection, both foodies at home and professionals have every wish catered for. Well, almost every wish that is ... there are a couple of limitations, because professional knives have to comply with many regulations. The challenge was therefore to tick off all these regulations and at the same time come up with an innovative design. The result, however, is Studio Piet Boon at its best: no compromises in terms of functionality and no unnecessary details. Straightforward, elegant and timeless.

PIET BOON

After his studies at the technical school in Amsterdam, Piet Boon began his career as a building contractor, but he would soon evolve into a high-profile Dutch designer. Today, Studio Piet Boon is an internationally operating total concept design company, where a team of architects, stylists and design professionals is continuously driven to exceed expectations, to stay true to the studio's reputation as the most renowned Dutch design studio in the world.

"We have focused on the transition from handle to blade. By making them from one piece of metal, the knives are given a sculptural look. This gives them a no-nonsense, pure and even a somewhat masculine character," says Piet Boon. The special feature of the four different knives - chef's knife, carving knife, bread knife and Japanese santoku knife - is that they all have the same length. This is not a coincidence, of course, but a self-imposed requirement to make them fit perfectly in the knife block at the same height. A central magnet ensures that the knives are always stored perfectly vertically. A simple line system makes it easy for the users to distinguish the knives in the block.
